New Bakery To Supply Country Around El Paso

Hundreds of people paid a visit Wednesday afternoon and evening to the new Tri-State bakery, and they all came away praising the modern arrangements, the cleanliness and the efficiency of the place. Every housewife came away with a freshly baked, sweet smelling loaf of bread as a souvenir.

J. J. Jones, George Franklin and other officials of the company met the visitors and showed them through the plant, explaining in detail all the operations necessary to turn out the finished product of the bakery.

The process, from the time a barrel of flour is turned into the mixing machine until it comes smoking hot out of the big ovens, was carefully explained to the guests. The entire process is completed without being touched by human hands.

This bakery is constructed with the idea of supplying the wholesale trade of the southwest, and the El Paso firm intends to put up a strong competition against the Los Angeles bakery that have been supplying the bulk of the wholesale trade of Arizona and New Mexico. Already the firm has booked large orders for daily shipment.

It is another El Paso industry that will help to keep El Paso on its feet as a supply point for the southwest, said George O. Franklin. "When we get this business for El Paso, we are not only helping ourselves," said he, "but we distribute the money in El Paso for the manufacturers of our product and at the same time we improve upon the surrounding dealers and buyers."

When they get to looking to El Paso for bread, buns and other things, they will begin to look for other things, and it helps to create a general demand for El Paso products.

Vice President Visits El Paso Making Speech

Chiefly whole, no matter how much we wish it might be done."

Mr. Marshall came to El Paso Thursday morning at 11:45 o'clock from Phoenix, Ariz. He said he had been out in the rural national garage for several weeks getting free air. Mr. Marshall is with him. They are both in mourning as the result of the loss of their adopted son, Morrison Marshall. For that reason, the president of the chamber of commerce, Mr. Marshall, stopped off for a three-hour visit. Mr. Marshall said he is the most honored Rotarian in his way of coming to four clubs and paying dues in none.

One of the first things the vice president asked for when he arrived was a box of Mexican cigars. E. A. Dow, consul in Juarez, sent a box of Juarez cigars to the vice president's room at the Del Norte.

Mr. Marshall was present at the Rotary luncheon by Harry Blackstone, slight-of-hand performer and the vice president of the chamber of commerce. He was playing a card game with the members of the Rotary. Mr. Marshall said he had not intended discussing the presidential campaign when he came here, but he changed his mind.

"I nominate Mr. Blackstone for president," the head of the national rotary said. "Because I believe he can lead the people better than anybody the Republicans can nominate."

Mr. Marshall told the Rotarians that he was the most remarkable man in public life today for the reason that he was not running for anything but home.

The nation's second foremost official was in a reminiscent mood. He told his hosts that he had passed several things during the past few years and that the war in Spain had taught him many of these things.

Referring again to what he said about the individual being responsible for the future of the government, the vice president said that individuals are and do make a difference in what it did before the war. "The war taught that we have a higher duty than man," he said, "although that was a good thing to do."

"I want every one of you to make money," the speaker said, "but I want every dollar you make to be so good that it will help to pay the debt on it without getting microbes into its system."

Mr. Marshall's brain is what must carry us through. We started getting our rights from King John at Runnymede. The right of man was won on the fields of France. Now the time has come for people to look around to find out what their duties are and do what they can to help the world as well as rights."

The vice president said that if we would trust God and love our fellow men all of the problems in the world could be solved. "The American republic is a great achievement in our history. The war, he declared, was worth what it cost because it taught us the most joy in the world is to be had by spending what we make for the common good and that the individualism better than the old, because he who gives most gets most."

Mr. Marshall, a second vice president of the chamber of commerce, said it stood for the principles he had described.

Second president Mrs. Marshall left at 2 o'clock for San Antonio. He was met by Mayor Charles Davis, C. M. Bassett, president of the chamber of commerce, M. Tolbert, secretary, John Reagan and Will Cronin, president of Clary.

BUS USELESS, SAYS MEDIATOR

Chicago, Ill., April 8.—Judge Samuel Alexander, sponsor for the bus system for stockyards workers, declared today that the failure of the bus acted as an arbitrator this week in the latest yards wage dispute. He said: "Workmen were asked to regard the bonus as part of their pay, and I honestly believe the employers acted in good faith. They told them they pay out. If you ask one of the men from the yards how much he gets, he will tell you, but you won't refer to the bonus."

Dennis Lane, international secretary of the American Meat Cutters and Butchers, said that the bonus looks like charity.

Paris contends that her allies—England and the United States—have "deserted" in the emergency. SOCIALISTS ASK BERLIN OBEY DEMANDS OF FRANCE

Berlin, Germany, April 8.—Majority Socialist members of the German cabinet have been placed in an embarrassing position by demands of labor leaders for withdrawal of regular troops from the Ruhr valley and for action in other matters involved in the situation which has developed since a French advance east of the Rhine.

It is freely admitted this action cannot be carried out without the consent of the government. It has been acting in the belief it had the support of all parties.

In official quarters regret is expressed that the Laborite demands amount to a mere support of premier Millerand of France and it is declared they are not feasible as the government is putting forth its utmost efforts to restore quiet in the Ruhr region. Liberal newspapers outspokenly condemn the maneuver, for which they hold Herr Legien responsible.
